CORAL REEF SNORKELING

In Maldives, the reefs form when corals grow in shallow water, as fringing reefs close to the smaller islands. The corals will continue to push upward and outward, well after the volcanic island is completely submerged. Over time, a lagoon forms between the corals and the sinking island resulting in a house reef formation around the lagoon. Eventually, the island is completely submerged and only the ring of corals remain. This is called an atoll. Waves may eventually pile sand and coral debris on top of the growing corals in the atoll, creating a strip of land.
